MEDIAEVAL SPAIN.

Kings of Castile and Leon.

Notwithstanding the most of the following are classed as silver, the base metal prevails, though doubtless when issued, they appeared equal to their superiors, which we must now view as deception. This custom however, spread well over Europe, and was continued by Germany until about 1870, and by Austria a much later period. Coins of the principle nations of the world to-day, are fair representations of the metal they are composed of.

The presence of silver in the following lots, is indicated by AR.

FROM HONOLULU.

A collection of 173 Bracteates, neatly mounted on card-board, with a black ground. Attributed. Size of Half Dime to Dollar and above. I believe it to be the largest and finest ever offered in this country. These curious mediums of exchange, used in the 12th and 13th centuries (chiefly) are very thin, uniface impressions in silver, and mostly struck from wooden dies. Condition with fewest exceptions, is very fine to perfect.
